Don't steam up your kitchen this summer. Steam some seafood instead. Our Outdoor Cooker can steam, boil, and deep-fry, and it holds up to a half-dozen lobsters, a half-bushel of clams, or two dozen crabs. And when the lazy days of summer start to wane, turn up the heat: Use the cooker year-round for deep-fried turkey, a Southern favorite. For the rest of your summer grilling needs, consider our charcoal or gas grill, as well as our many grilling accessories.

Special Invitation to All Dan's Readers

"We're throwing a gala party for Dan Rattiner at the fabulous Riggio Estate and you are invited! "But shhhhh...don't breathe a word about this to Dan!"

Mark your calendar for Saturday, June 10th, 6:00 to 8:00 p.m.

That's when the Hamptons will see one of the most elegant and festive cocktail parties of this or any season.

If you enjoy Dan's columns and have made Dan's Papers part of your Hamptons ritual, then please join us and help us tell Dan how much he has meant to our East End community for all these years.

Your hosts will be Louise and Leonard Riggio at their magnificent Bridgehampton estate, Minden.

If you've never seen Minden, it will take your breath away. It's one of the most spectacular estates in the Hamptons, an American castle. And what a grand celebration we shall have there!

But please don't talk up this party to Dan.

No, it's not a surprise. He knows about it. It's just that Dan is a modest, soft-spoken guy who hates to have a big fuss made over him.

And at this party, we are going to make a fuss.

Here's why. This is Dan's 40th year of publishing Dan's Papers. Forty years of doing anything deserves to be commended, let alone 40 years of meeting weekly deadlines and turning out, with consistent excellence, the Hampton's most popular newspaper.

That's why a group of Dan's friends are organizing this party and inviting the entire East End community to join with us to say, "Thanks, Dan, for letting us be part of your passionate love affair with the East End. It's been a great run and we hope it goes for at least another 40 years!"

The Honorary Chairman for this gala affair is Tom Wolfe. Co-Chairs are Muriel Siebert and Wilbur Ross.

The guest list reads like a Hamptons Who's Who, and we've retained Linda Shapiro to make sure the party is first class all the way.

At the event, Dan will be presented with the first PONY (Pride Of New York) Award, which will become an annual Hamptons tradition honoring those who've made their fellow New Yorkers proud.

All proceeds from this benefit will go to the Maryhaven Center of Hope, one of Dan's favorite charities, which specializes in helping children and adults with developmental disabilities on the East End and throughout Suffolk.

So come join us at Minden for an enchanted evening of light jazz, fine wine, scrumptious food by Starr Boggs, elegance and a few fun surprises that will make this a party neither you nor Dan will soon forget!

Reservations are strictly limited at $150 per person. For information or reservations, please see below....

ROYAL VELVET

Fieldcrest Towel Sale

CAVEAT EMPTOR (BUYER BEWARE)

Don't be misled by advertisements for European goose down comforters at supposedly "SALE PRICES". We'll show you that most of those ads do not represent good values at all. Just because these advertisements are from major departments stores - do not be fooled-all down is not alike.

The quality of goose down is measured in fill power (also know as loft). Fill Power is the amount of cubic inches one ounce of down will fill. Our 800 plus Siberian Goose Down will fill between 800 and 850 cubic inches of space. "The Company Store" catalog always lists the fill power of their goose down. Bring in their catalog and we'll generally save you 50% off their prices.

Goose Down Comforters are an investment, with proper care a fine quality comforter will last a life time. Our high quality 100% cotton shells, or tickings, are divided into baffle boxes. The baffle box has a mesh channel separating the top from the bottom of the comforter. The baffle allows the down to give you maximum loft without collecting in one section of the comforter. We do not cater to the consumer that is more interested in price than quality. Our most valuable asset is our customer. We will only sell a product that we believe to be the highest value at the best price. Cheap low quality down should fill garage cans not pillows and comforters. All our goose down pillows and comforters contain 100% goose down even though it is legal to combine 70% down and 30% feathers and label the item 100% goose down. Remember feathers are those things with quills, down is similar to tiny balls of cotton, absolutely no hard quill. Our goose down comforters and pillows are machine washable because they only contain down.

The larger the individual down cluster the higher the fill power. The higher the fill power the better the comforter will insulate thus providing more comfort to you. Since you are spending 1/3 of your life in bed it should be as luxurious as possible. - Why not?

This Way Out

If You Don't Know How To Get Out Of The Hamptons, These Signs Will Tell You

By Dan Rattiner

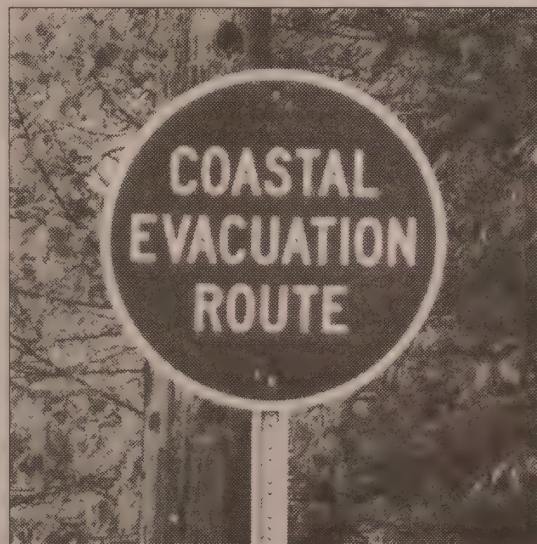

The big news this past week in the Hamptons has been the installation of these round blue signs bearing the words "Coastal Evacuation Route." They are on the Montauk Highway and off the Montauk Highway accompanied by arrows pointing to the Montauk Highway and they all point west once you get to the Montauk Highway. They add to the general clutter of the area, the blue matches none of the other street furniture or signs which in general are in green and they've clearly been put in at vast expense. From what I can see, these hundreds of signs extend east to west parallel to the coast, for about fifty miles, rather than away from it, sort of putting a lie to whatever it is this is all about. But then I guess that's bureaucracy.

But, which bureaucracy? At first I thought maybe the signs were put up by the Federal Transportation Department which, having concluded a bypass through the Hamptons is now out of the question, has decided they can get everybody to leave town by getting everybody to leave town.

As in, Oh look, this is the coastal evacuation route, this is the way they want us to go. Or, Oh my God, the Russian Intercontinental Ballistic missiles are coming, let's get out of here.

A form of, if you can't raise the bridge, lower the water.

My next best guess was that the signs were put up by some state or federal group that deals with disaster. The nuclear plant in Millstone was going to have a meltdown, or the Montauk Lighthouse was going to explode, or Godzilla had come ashore in Amagansett. I called around and although as this is written, I have gotten no reply, I am of the belief that this is the most likely explanation of this sign. Whoever did it and whatever it cost, it was certainly money that might have been spent on education or public health, aid to the poor, or some other worthy cause.

The thing is that here on Eastern Long Island, where there's only one road leading out of town, it's kind of useless and a waste to point out that there it is. I suppose it's possible that a disaster alert could be called and some people who are dumb as posts could get in their cars and drive around in circles, or get out to the Montauk Highway and note that everybody is heading in the other direction, as in, "Oh my God, it must be we're going the wrong way." But really, this is a no brainer.

The truth is, if we have a disaster, we have two choices. We can drive out to the Montauk Highway, note which direction the traffic jam is headed and get in line and coast to a halt. Or, we can go down to the basement or up to the attic, depending on the nature of the disaster, sit in a chair, lean forward and as the old joke goes, kiss your butt goodbye.

As has been pointed out repeatedly in study after study, there are too many people here and not enough time to adequately evacuate the area before whatever disaster you might imagine wants to strike. We're here. Signs or no signs, we're staying. What a waste.

New restaurants opening all over the place. Look for John Mahon who is opening an Amagansett version of Pig 'n' Whistle, called, naturally, Pig 'n' Whistle East, and Ricardo Translavina is opening a brand new restaurant where the Watermark was in East Hampton. And, of course, there is Wolfgang Pluck's new place in Noyac.

Brinkley, Beegan, Bergin. Sounds like the title of a new Billy Joel tune.

Sean (Puffy) Combs, who is reportedly pulling up stakes from East Hampton to settle in Westhampton Beach has failed to settle a civil lawsuit over damages suffered in a CCNY gymnasium stampede in 1991 in which nine people died and twenty-nine others were injured at an event that Combs and fellow promoter Heavy D overbooked. The trial is now underway.

One person who won't be in the Hamptons for Memorial Day weekend is Courtney Sale Ross, widow of Time-Warner founder Steve Ross and herself the founder of The Ross School. She will be in Italy, where she is set to marry a Swedish businessman named Anders Holst. The wedding will be performed by the Rev. Jesse Jackson and there will be performances by Natalie Cole and Andrea Bocelli. The location is a castle outside Florence and arrangements have been made for guests of the wedding to get private tours of the Pitti Palace and the Uffizi Gallery. Congratulations to both of them.

New kids in town this year will be Sarah Jessica Parker and her husband Matthew Broderick who rented in Sagaponack.

A play in entitled Jitney, by August Wilson, was named Best Play of the season by the New York Drama Critics Circle. Hmmm.

Ed Burns of Wainscott is co-starring along with Kelsey Grammer and Robert DeNiro in the filming of Fifteen Minutes, which apparently takes a good deal longer than that to see.

Regis Philbin, often a visitor to the Hamptons, is licensing his name to Phillips-Van Heusen Corp. for a line of shirts and ties. Philbin's Who Wants to be A Millionaire has topped the TV rating for weeks and it was only a TV movie on Jesus Christ that dethroned him for a day.

The fundraiser, partnered by Dan's Papers and the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center last Saturday was a smash hit. More than 300 guests attended and brought in about $40,000 through the auctioning of the paintings of Dan's Paper's cover artists. John Roland, Bill Beutel and Dan Rattiner hosted the event which featured food by Starr Boggs, Vodka by Argent and the

(featuring films that either takes place in the Hamptons or were filmed here)

May 20th ~ Grey Gardens

This somewhat shocking documentary actually remains compellingly poetic and touching. It captures a small portion of the later years of Edith Bouvier Beale and her daughter, Edie (aunt and cousin of Jacqueline Onassis), filmed in their decaying, over grown mansion in East Hampton. Once seen, Edith and Edie, will not soon leave you.

Gates In Free Fall

In A Rush Of Thundering Hoofbeats, A Billionaire Catches Bill Gates

By Dan Rattiner

I read in the paper last week that Bill Gates is no longer the richest man in the world. Larry Ellison is. It's a startling development.

I think it's been seven years that Bill Gates has held the title of world's richest man. Before that it was some Japanese banker. And before that it was Sam Walton, the man who founded Wal-Mart. I think also Donald Trump stuck his bushy eyebrows in there for a month or two. The title of the World's richest man is doled out once a year in an annual issue of Forbes Magazine, which tallies up all the assets and liabilities of everybody everywhere. (Yes, even you.) They then rank these people as they might be ranked in The New York Times Hardcover Bestseller List or in the Billboard Top 50's list. And though there is no interim report, it is possible for readers to follow the waxing and waning of the various fortunes by doing certain intricate calculations every few weeks. And so it was that around 1993, Bill Gates pulled ahead of the pack with his millions of shares of Microsoft and then began to make a runaway of it. He was at $60 billion. #2 was at $24 billion. Six months later, he was at $135 billion, and #2 was at $27 billion.

Since it was apparent at this point that Bill Gates had pulled so far ahead of the pack that he was likely to retain the title for the rest of Time. I, for one, pretty much lost interest in it as a contest. Long Live the King. Gates seemed to respond by suddenly, between 1993 and 1995, becoming very of city state where there lived the world's richest person. Dukes and Duchesses could live in Seattle or Portland. Redmond was for the King, the richest person. Bill formed a charitable trust and named his father to run it. Father gave away $10 billion. A bauble or two. But much appreciated you may be sure, by those that received it.

At this point, as you know, some people down in Washington and some people in fifteen of the fifty city states, apparently in a fit of jealousy, caused lawsuits to be filed against Bill Gates and his company. Rules were being broken. Enemies tortured. An internal memo, it was found, espoused the slogan not of "where do you want to go today?" but of "expand, embrace, extinguish," as in what gets done to competitors.

And so it was that the great King Bill Gates got brought down, or got into the process of being brought down. He's there today. And then somebody on Wall Street noticed that the value of Bill Gates' holdings had dropped from $134 billion to a paltry $63 billion. And by looking further, they noticed that one of the also rans, a Chairman of the Board of another internet company, had his holdings increase during this period to surpass Gates. What had been worth middle aged. Before that time he was a skinny kid, hopping around, brushing the hair out of his eyes, eating cheetos. After that time, he was a fat person. His hairline receded. He developed a paunch and a double chin. The world's richest person had to look like the world's richest person. And so he did.

On a political level, Redmond, Washington, where Bill Gates lives and works, became a kind $60 billion to Larry Ellison, who owns 24% of Oracle, was now worth $69 billion.

The King is dead. Long Live the King. And welcome to the new City State of Redwood Shores, California, home of the world's richest man. It just goes to show you how long forever is in the computer industry.

Of course, the reign of King Larry could be a very short one. Jealous prosecutors, now realizing that Gates is on his way out, may file against Oracle. Who is this new King? He won't get away so easily either.

Meanwhile, back in Redmond, vice presidents and department managers, software designers and marketing executives, are visiting Gates' lakefront villa (it's 55,000 square feet, half the size of the Rennert mansion in Sagaponack), walking through the various galleries and music rooms, and visiting and consoling the newly overthrown Bill, telling him to buck up, that this was the best thing that could happen, that he was still worth $65 billion, and that he could stage a comeback.

"I'm not a quitter," Gates would sob, his pot belly aquiver. He'd shake a fist at the sky, or at the underside of the ceiling that was digitally enhanced to look like the sky. "MacDuff, where art thee MacDuff?" he'd shout. Something like that.

"Over onto your back," he'd say, grabbing an arm and a leg of an invisible Larry Ellison and giving it a yank. "Now I don't like doing this any more than you do," he'd say and he'd pummel him.

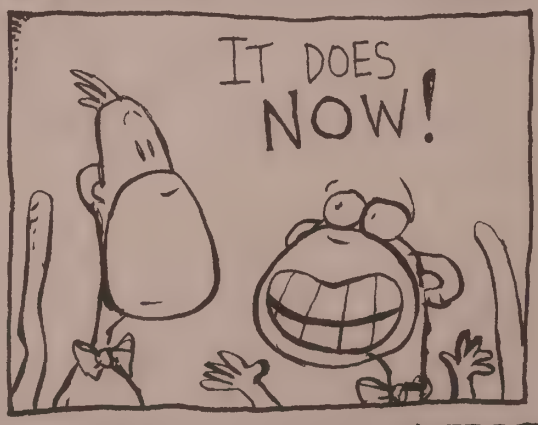

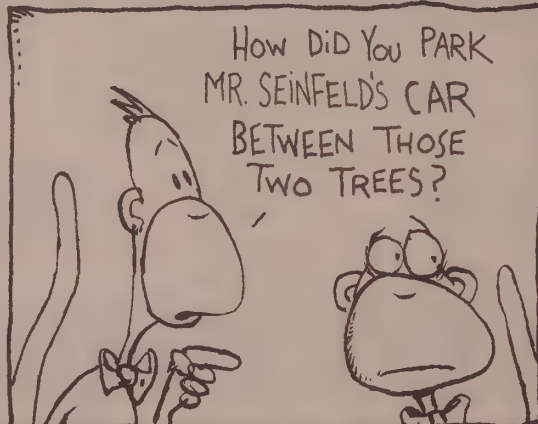

Maybe Gates will take a second job, one he can work nights, a courtier might say. Just for a little while, might say a second. Until you would catch up. It would be good exercise for you. Help you lose that paunch. Sir.

As they say – and I've just made this up, there is no second place in the world's richest man contest.

I've Just Updated The Dan's Papers Roadmap To The Hamptons And I've Learned A Lot

By Dan Rattiner

I spent a great deal of time yesterday updating a map of the Hamptons. I sat outside at a picnic table and spread the whole map out in front of me – a repeat of something I had drawn eight years ago – and using a wide range of reference tools added some of the new roads that had been built in this community.

The map in question is the original work of art used in the creation of the red and blue Road Map of the Hamptons that I've published annually for more than thirty years. I'm sure you're familiar with it. It looks like a gas station road map, all folded up and it's given away free in the stores in the community. The artwork for it, which is on a piece of architect's vellum, is two and half feet high and eight feet long and has to be reduced a bit to fit the folding machine in the printing process.

Actually, what I was updating was not the original map. The original map was drawn over two days in 1968 and after use, was every year rolled up and put in a safe place. There weren't a whole lot of roads on it in 1968 and every year after that I'd take it out and add a few as developers got approvals and bulldozed the paths. Then, in 1990 we put the road map away somewhere in the office of Dan's Papers and could not find it for the following year's additions.

It was one thing when I put the original artwork away myself. I had spent all this time drawing it and I wasn't about to lose it, but by 1992 we had a staff of twenty-five and the staff would put character building experience.

The 1992 map was after several updates, lost in 1997. It was chock full of new roads and in its absence we just repeated the 1997 map year after year – until this year, when, building the addition onto Dan's Papers begun last spring and moving a great deal of material from one room to another, we found it again.

Frankly, it is astonishing the amount of new roads that got built between 1997 and 2000. They are not evenly divided by community. I found only two new roads in Montauk, five in Amagansett, but about twenty each in Springs, Northwest, Wainscott and Sagaponack. There were only three or four new roads in downtown East Hampton. I didn't find any in Sag Harbor, which is almost fully built, and an average of five in Bridgehampton, Mecox, Water Mill, Southampton, Hamptons Bays, Quogue and Westhampton. Since it is a major investment to buy a large number of acres and go through the process of doing a subdivision with all new roads in it, one would have to say the hot areas for real estate are Northwest, Wainscott, and Sagaponack.

it away every year and three years later they couldn't find it.

I spent another two days redrawing the map, by hand, using rapidograph pens, on a new piece of vellum (same two feet by eight feet) and periodically cursing my staff for having misplaced it. Drawing the map again, a three day project with the same roads, took great discipline. It was a

I don't include Springs because the dramatic increase is caused by the demand for family housing. The number of kids that go to the Springs School is way out of proportion to the size of the community. High school taxes there are keeping real estate low. This is not a hot area.

As I updated the road map with all the new roads, a process that took many hours, I found myself feeling a little sad. Nowhere were there any major new connector roads. Everywhere there were small dead end residential streets ending in cul de sacs along which – and I've gone down these roads and seen this for myself – are expensive second home residences, invariably landscaped to the nines with what can only be described as suburban style greenery. In other words, rich people's homes with beautiful bushes, turf and fertilizers.

The developers, of course, when they buy a forty or fifty acre parcel and put in new roads, get to name them. Many of them have fairly mundane names – Clearview, Maple Lane, Robin's Way – but some developers and I don't know what was going though their minds, gave their roads names after the farms and woodlands they replaced. In northern Quogue there is a suburban development where the roads have names such as Whippoorwill Lane, Blue Jay Way and Cherry Blossom Lane. What is this? Nostalgia?

There were other occasions where the developer had bought woods that had an old beach buggy trail through it, which I had marked with a dotted line, but now had built new roads, totally ignoring the existence of the earlier one. I would white out the beach buggy road and put the suburban road in its place.

There were other occasions where the developer had paved the old beach buggy road and renamed it.

Many of the old dirt roads of course had been given informal names by the local people and were never registered. It's the developer's prerogative to rename a dirt road if the name has never been officially filed.

A number of these old dirt roads I had named personally. Back in '68, when I had drawn the original map, there were lots of dirt roads signified by dotted lines that had no names at all, so I named them.

I named them Lois Lane, and Jeep's Folly, Lost Cow's Journey, Uncle Leo's Meander, Werewolf Path and, in Bridgehampton, one road in particular which I named for my best friend at the time, Michael O'Donoghue. He had phoned me at my home in East Hampton just as I was putting the lines on the paper. The road was straight. But I had drawn it with a wiggle when the phone rang, I told him.

"I think I'll name a road after you," I said.

From time to time the roads I named got official names. Michael O'Donoghue's Road, for instance, became Blank Lane – what a bore – so I reluctantly changed it. Still, quite a few of these dirt roads retain the original names I gave them – at least on my map, anyway.

One of my names, however, seems to have been inadvertently accepted by officialdom. It is called Werewolf Path – not one of my more imaginative

A New School In East Hampton Will Add A New Dimension To The Town

By Dan Rattiner

Dan's Papers has just received word that the town of East Hampton has been chosen by New York State to be the site of a brand new public school

"We are fully aware what a mess our public school system's are in, in this state," Governor Pataki said. "And so, we have budgeted more than a hundred million dollars to create the finest state of the art kindergarten through grade twelve school in America. It will have a student teacher ratio of almost one to one. Experts will be brought in from all over the world to teach these children, sixty percent of whom will be from either East Hampton or Southampton towns, the designated area to receive this gift for the children. Sophomores, juniors and seniors will each get a laptop computer to work on, the walls of the school building will be adorned with Renaissance paintings, there will be replicas of sculptures from antiquity on the grounds and the focus will be on intense study and making the work fun."

Specifically the state has chosen as its site about 250 acres of a 2,000 acre dense forest out by the East Hampton Airport. The land is unused at this time but sits upon a finger of the main Long Island Aquifer that extends about seventy miles from

Patchogue to Amagansett. As for zoning, it is currently industrial, which means it could be used for meatpacking, oil refining and food canning facilities. Instead it will be like a college campus, approximately the size of Southampton College. The possible damage to the aquifer will be mitigated by the use of a full-scale water purifying plant. Oh. In order that every kid in all the local public other schools can come and exchange information and try out new ideas for their curriculums. There will also be a program where older people who have accumulated vast experience will be able to give seminars and teach courses on an adjunct basis. Housing will be provided for them on campus.

Sound wonderful? Well, it is. Except the benefactor is not the State of New York but a wealthy woman named Courtney Ross who wants to make her small school in East Hampton into a bigger one. The proposal is on the table. Public or private, it's the same difference as far as our kids are concerned is the way I look at it.

* * *

I have made the Hamptons my home for almost fifty years. I've had four children born out here, two of them having gone through the local high school system and graduated to go off to college and the two younger ones still in high school. For many years, I thought that the public educational system here was quite solid and I thought it a good thing that the student body had such a great diversity. I thought the teachers were committed and were highly skilled at what they were doing and I thought the high schools don't come beating down the door to get in, there is a $9,000 tuition charge for the year, a surcharge placed on the taxes of each homeowner with kids attending which for most local people can be reduced to one or two thousand dollars, with scholarships. The average tuition paid will be five thousand dollars.

Altogether a total of five hundred lucky students will be admitted to this school. There will also be an institute on this property where teachers from administration's job was to provide a support system for the teachers. The administration would handle the finances, deal with supplies and buildings and grounds and mete out the discipline necessary for the unruly students. But they'd pretty much leave the teacher's alone to do what they did best.

In recent years however, I've seen there was a sea change in how things were done and it was not for the better. The emphasis seemed to shift to taxes and school principals resigning and being hired and searches for school superintendents and six figure incomes for them. At the same time, students' test scores declined.

What it was all about became crystal clear to me about a year ago, when one of my younger sons, a high school junior, was scheduled to take a one-week trip abroad to London and Paris. Several teachers had volunteered to chaperone. But three months before students were scheduled to leave – and there were twenty-two of them on this particular trip – the school district hired a new superintendent who apparently did not approve of this sort of trip as put together by her predecessor.

The students themselves had scrimped and saved to get monies together for the trip, us parents had provided the rest and the day before the plane was to leave Kennedy Airport, when all the passports were in place and all the bags packed, there was a final farewell meeting in the school cafeteria at which time the new superintendent stood up and announced the trip was cancelled.

She said she was a believer in not having the school accept the liability of this kind of a trip and as there was a war going on in the Balkans, 1500 miles away, she couldn't guarantee the students' safety. On the other hand, she said the students were free to go on their own. In fact, she said that some of the teachers who were going as chaperones could still go too so that the event could still take place but without the school's authorization.

Soon it became clear however, that no teachers present, not even the ones signed on to be chaperones, were willing to go unless the school sanctioned it. You could walk around the room and they would quietly tell you why. They were afraid of retribution from the administration. The new superintendent said one thing, but they didn't trust it and felt she meant another. They had families to support and mouths to feed, they couldn't risk being fired by going on an unauthorized trip.

As for the money raised, that was just too bad, there was no refund clause in the contract between the school and the travel agent putting the trip together. On the other hand, about a week later, the travel agent agreed to refund about half the cost; apparently he felt very bad about it.

At that point the administration led by the new school superintendent, vowed to make amends to the students who hadn't been able to go by holding fundraising events and "if necessary, washing dishes," as the new superintendent said, until all the money lost was made up. In fact one event was held and about twenty percent of the remaining money raised, and that was the end of it. The administration had sent a final sorry message to the students involving making promises and keeping their word. It was a shameful, shameful business.

As a result of all of this, I removed my youngest son from high school and enrolled him in the Ross School, which is a six year-old private school located out by the East Hampton Airport. I would have done the same for the oldest of my youngest children, but he would be a senior this year and had many friends. Also, the Ross School at that time only went from kindergarten up to grade ten. He would be out of high school before there would be a grade twelve.

The Ross School at the present time has about 180 students and about 150 faculty members. They occupy about 70,000 square feet of space in six buildings in woods that are currently zoned as commercial/industrial. Mrs. Ross, a woman whom I've heard speak (but have never met) has bought 250 vacant adjacent acres and has proposed to enlarge the school to about 450 students, include a wise elder's center and an institute to study new teaching methods. The buildings, sprinkled around the woods would total about 400,000 square feet. The money for this school – and so far its budget is about twelve million dollars a year – comes entirely from Mrs. Ross, the widow of the legendary businessman Steven Ross, wealthy philanthropist. Ross passed away seven years ago, leaving his wife

A Mother And Daughter's Journey Through Dyslexia And School Bureaucracy

By Jerry Cimisi

When Judi Shesh's daughter Hope was in kindergarten five years ago in Bay Shore she was diagnosed with a learning disability.

"The kindergarten teacher worked with her at home during the summer," Judi said, "and the first grade teacher met with her before first grade started."

It was in the first grade, that Judi was told her daughter had dyslexia. "She was interchanging letters in words," said Judi. This is a common trait of dyslexia. "Actually," said Judi, "it felt great to have a diagnosis. We just weren't sure what was wrong. Learning disability was too broad. I needed something more specific to educate ourselves in order to help her."

But, despite efforts by teachers then and in subsequent years, it was a difficult proposition to teach Hope to read. By the end of fourth grade she was only reading at a first grade level. Her difficulty with letters and words carried into math, where she also transposed numbers.

Judi has two older daughters, whom she said have done very well in school. When asked how her younger daughter handled her dyslexia, Judi said, "She learned to cope. I found out to what extent she did at her tenth birthday party last summer. I realized she could not read her birthday cards. She would take a gift with a card and say, 'I wonder who this is from?' and someone would call out, 'Me!' – so she wouldn't have to read the card."

Judi did extensive research on the nature of dyslexia and how children with it might be educated. She discovered that there were schools who taught a special method that apparently was successful in most cases. One school was in White Plains, another in Massachusetts, and they used what is called the Orton-Gillingham philosophy. And then Judi discovered that a small school was opening in Bridgehampton that would be run by a teacher, Helene Silverbank-Frost who had been trained at the school in Massachusetts.

Judi's daughter began to attend the Pioneer School in Bridgehampton last September. Five mornings every week, Judi drives Hope from Bay Shore to Bridgehampton, a round trip of a bit more than one hundred miles. This was in fact the reason Judi applied for a job at Dan's Papers. "I was dropping my daughter off at nine o'clock for school and picking her up at three. It didn't make too much sense to drive back west fifty miles and then in a few hours drive back east again."

If school districts cannot provide an educational service a child needs, such as, in this case, someone who can teach a dyslexic student how to read, the district is obligated to transport that child to where he or she can get that instruction – that is, within a fifty miles radius.

The Pioneer School is fifty-three miles from Judi's home. So the school district would not provide Hope with transportation to Bridgehampton. "I told them," said Judi, "I would drive Hope to the high school, which is fifty miles from the Pioneer School, but no, they said it had to be door to door."

This is one of the issues that has Judi at the rear of the brain that are activated when normal readers concentrate on text are not being used in the brains of those with dyslexia. Apparently the sounding out of a word into its phonetic components, which is a beginning step for all readers, possesses a special difficulty of dyslexics.

The brain normally connects letters it sees on a page to the sounds those letters make, while the reader with dyslexia has a great deal of trouble in doing so.

Specifically, Wernicke's area, which deciphers words, is not active enough, and Broca's area, which is used for speech, is overactive.

Dyslexics often mix up letters such as "b" and "d, and cannot differentiate words such as scared and sacred, sing and sign. They may also exhibit confusion in regards to up and down, and differentiations of time.

As an example of a dyslexic having difficulty in connecting speech and the written work, Judi related that words with "er," "or" and "ir" endings, which all make the same sound, are very frustrating for dyslexics. Automatically most of us know that "fact" becomes "factor" not "facter," and that "play" becomes "player" not "playir," but, said Judi, a dyslexic does not know how this works. Actually there are specifically linguistic rules governing these endings and the Orton-Gillingham approach teaches them.

Judi Shesh has requested reimbursement from the Bay Shore school district for what it has cost her to enroll – and transport – her daughter to Bridgehampton. An impartial hearing has been initiated. Originally Helene Silverbank-Frost of the Pioneer School was going to testify on Hope's behalf, but then decided she did not want to be asked questions as a medical expert on dyslexia. So just before last Christmas Eve, Judi had Hope tested by a neuropsychologist at a cost of $950. And the result was indeed a diagnosis of dyslexia.

There have been three hearing dates so far. The first was September; then two dates in October, the next is scheduled in June, when the neuropsychologist will testify, after visiting the Pioneer School at the end of May.

Judi related that she had a meeting with the superintendent of the Bay Shore district, Evelyn Blose Hollman, last March. "She first said she would not speak to me, but then I insisted and she relented. I spent forty-five minutes with her and she was polite and she gave me a tissue when I cried. Of course this is an emotional issue for me. I presented her the facts of not only Hope's case but information on dyslexia that would benefit many children."

But, said Judi, in the end nothing seemed to have come of the meeting. "It's ironic. They won't spend the money to hire someone who can help dyslexic students, but I wonder how much they are spending to defend themselves in this case?"

loggerheads with the school district. Now it is obvious it would be expensive for the district to ferry one student on a one hundred and six mile round trip five times a week. But, as Judi says, why doesn't the district simply hire someone schooled in the Orton-Gillingham method to work with its students?

"Certainly my daughter isn't the only one with this problem. I recently read that possibly one in seven children has dyslexia to a certain degree. Wouldn't it make sense all around for the district to have someone on staff who is expert in dealing with this?"

After nearly one full year at the Pioneer School, Judi said her daughter can actually, for the first time, read.

The school presently is small, with only four students: Hope, a fifth grader, two other fifth grade boys and one seventh grade boy. And it is expensive: $25,000 – for one year, another reason school districts should hire an instructor skilled in the method Judi says is working so well with Hope.

Studies have shown dyslexics display different brain activity when trying to read. Sections in a fortune estimated at more than $900 million.

Mrs. Ross has made this school her life's work and in many ways running the numbers and looking at what the average tuition is for the local kids who go there (they comprise sixty percent of the student body,) it's not hard to conclude that about ninety cents on the dollar of the education of my son is being provided by Mrs. Ross. I'm not rich; I want the best for my kids. I'll take it any way. I can get it.

This article is written as a response to a front page story on the Long Island section of the Sunday Times two weeks ago, which was all about the Ross School. The thrust of the article is that it was Mrs. Ross and her millions against the community bent on preserving the site that has been identified as part of a water recharge area.

East Hampton Town has some of the most restrictive zoning there is in the country. Environmentalists have been all over it to see to it that nothing harmful is done to the town. And yet, until Mrs. Ross' expansion to the school was applied for, there was no suggestion that this area be anything but factories, power plants, refineries and other industrial operations.

Of course, a study of every aspect of this proposal should be investigated. A purification system must be built on the property. There can be no water pollution.

As for the impact of the project on the land, the footprint of the buildings will be less than five acres; ninety-eight percent of the property will be woods and fields. As for the scale of it – at the moment the Hamptons are a one-note town, a resort. Without this school, which will max out in 2009 at about the size of Southampton College, East Hampton will continue to be a one note- town, although one with a little experimental school in it. At the proposed size, the project rivals that of the tourist industry and adds a new dimension to the Hamptons – one of the mind and the intellect and of learning.

The big winners will be our children, not the children of the wealthy and elite rich people, but the children of the locals and not necessarily just those of the Ross School but those of every school in the community who will send teachers to the institute to come up with exciting new ways to teach.

The article in the Times said that proponents for the school, were mostly the parents of the Ross School kids, while the opponents were the locals. Well, I'm a local. You can get a little more local than me I suppose. But I think we've hit upon a good thing here. We're being offered a tremendous gift. After checking it out, we ought to take it.

The Bay Shore district is also claiming that her daughter had been improving under their tutelage, though, as Judi said, during the time her daughter was in the Bay Shore district, the family had also supplemented the school's efforts by hiring a private tutor for two years. At any rate, is only now, after a year at the Pioneer School, that Hope can read a menu or the titles of videos.

After Hope had been at the Pioneer School only two months, a progress report in November, 1999 had found her progressing well in almost all categories. In a section of the many-page evaluation concerning reading and writing, the reports says, "Hope has written an acoustic poem, a free verse poem, and a Haiku poem. They were all exceptional."

Whatever the outcome of the Shesh's battle with the educational system, there is the happiness of Hope saying, "I always dreamed I would be able to read, and now I can. This was my birthday wish every year."

Police Escort Caravan Of Native American People Protesting At Shinnecock Land

By Chris Stanley

On Saturday, May 13 in Southampton, the Shinnecock Land Defense Committee's "Save the Hamptons" event called for immediate and urgent awareness of the need to preserve Open Spaces in the Hamptons.

Participants arrived from everywhere and gathered at the train station in Hampton Bays. They were greeted by Event Coordinator, Ruben Bess Valdez, and other members of the Shinnecock Land Defense Committee.

Mr. Valdez announced that there would be a procession of vehicles making a tour from Hampton Bays, through Flanders, and parts of Southampton, to view the sites of Open Spaces that were about to under-go "development."

Valdez said, "I must remind everyone that from the beginning of the route to the end, land is slated to be developed within a very short amount of time, including the land across the street from this train station.

"Right over there, where we see those beautiful trees, they're going to put in a supermarket because they claim that we need it - and not just a supermarket - a super-size, extra deluxe super-duper market. And that corner, this corner and that corner are all part of it.

"It's going to be done and there's very little we can do about it except to bring some awareness - to show that we know right from wrong.

"This is just fine the way it is. Isn't this enough? We have the train station - 7-Eleven - the Fire Department. They really want us to become urbanized out here where we have run from the main Sunrise Highway that goes through the traditional land of the Shinnecock.

"These lands are slated to be developed in a short amount of time. And it won't be you and I living there. It won't be these fine officers living there. It will be people that can afford to live there and it will be exclusive. These things are not right, and we're here today to express our dissatisfaction with this system in the hope that some time somebody will listen and do the right thing and stop this development."

A Southampton Town Police escort was given to a caravan of more than twenty participating vehicles as they stopped gridlock Saturday traffic on their way to the chosen sites and finally ended their hour-long tour at the Thunderbird Coffee

Shop on Old Montauk Highway in Southampton.

The group brandished a Native American flag and posters demanding the preservation of indigenous land. Drum beating was heard, accompanied by Indian male voices singing in their own language.

Participants gathered in clusters behind the teepee that had been erected as a symbol of protest against the desecration of Indian burial grounds urbanization. We're here to live among country, free air, green trees, birds and animals. This is part of what we're supposed to be about. Why are they changing it? And why are they changing it against our will?

"That's what our march is about today. The caravan will be going through endangered areas. This isn't the only area. The Red Creek area is slated for development - the new town area, which we'll be going through, as well as parcels along by developer, Parrish Pond Associates.

Ruben Bess Valdez introduced the first of four speakers to address the crowd on environmental issues.

Susan Blake, coordinator of PeaceSmiths Environmental Group, in Amityville, told a story about Wounded Bear, an American Indian who had suggested the use of Native American technology in an attempt to save the fifth oldest Elm tree in the country from being cut down because of the Asian Longhorn beetle problem. Her environmental group is committed to the preservation of endangered trees and the restoration of the earth's ecological balance through human awareness.

The next speaker, Roberto Mucaro Borrero, from the Taino Tribe in Puerto Rico, (the first Indian tribe to greet Christopher Columbus on this continent), lives in New York City and is an advocate for the rights of indigenous people all over the world.

During his travels he noticed that the land that had been inhabited by indigenous people in their natural and simple way of life was the most beautiful and ecologically sound. "This is like a spiritual battle," he said. "We're not talking about a natural disaster here. We're talking about things that people have done and are continuing to do. The level of consciousness today is consumerism. There's no thought of what happens afterwards. They just take, take, take, take, but there's no thought to what happens to the kids - to the future generations. The earth can't sustain that. If there's a natural disaster, yes, the earth can sustain it because it's naturally done. But if we're polluting with all that nuclear waste, that area of land is never going to be able to produce again."

"In Vieques," he continued, "the land has been bombed for the last sixty years - being used as a training ground by U.S. military operations abroad - and for sixty years we've had a high level of cancer. It looks like a lunar landscape. But where the people have camped out and lived simply you can actually see where the plants have come up again - little plants that have not been growing there in sixty years. So, it just shows you that just a little bit of resistance can allow that earth mother to really rejuvenate herself - just like the natural woman's cycle. And I think that's really fascinating - as a man."

"We have no respect," Mr. Borrero added. "It's something that we see constantly as native people. The whole idea of 'development' - whose idea of development is it? We see this all over the place. Are they really talking to people? Do they have understanding of the environment and the impact that is going on - especially in these kinds of areas where you have specific ecosystems that are not found in other places? Long Island is full of those kinds of ecosystems."

Ruben Bess Valdez followed the speaker with thoughts of his own:

"Over time, we might not be able to hold back what's going on here in Southampton. I understand that what we're fighting about is a global issue, and a matter of raising consciousness. We haven't given up yet, and as a matter of fact, we have a whole new second wind to fight with. We have been in court on land issues. In some we have prevailed; in some we have not. The best thing about what is happening is that we remember that

Who's Here:

By Janet Berg

It was almost two years ago, when the seemingly coy author, Susan Merrell, gave a lecture before a crowd of sixty people in a publishing class at Southampton College and told what the transition was like, as she ventured from non-fiction into fiction.

There was an exalted, yet modest tone in her voice that you couldn't help getting pleasure from; as you imagined her pinching herself, after her first non-fiction publication, The Accidental Bond: How Sibling Connections Influence Adult Relationships.

As she described the reality of becoming a first time author, she told the class, "If you're in it for the glory; it won't happen. You must love writing 'alone' in a room.

Above all, you need to keep a sense of humor to survive, when you hear people say, 'She's awful or she's wonderful.'"

She talked about her self-doubts. "Even by the fifth reading, I wondered if it should be published at all. Her publishing date arrived during the O.J. Simpson trial, when the verdict was handed down, and she was bumped off every TV Show. "I was juiced," she said.

Although she didn't have the luxury of tour, the producers were wonderful, not what you would think of tabloid TV. "Originally, I had visions of being limoed everywhere; but TV can be a very cruel medium. You don't know if you'll get seventeen makeup people, or if you'll look like you hadn't brushed your hair in days. I learned, in order to be heard, you have to be yourself. I improved as I went across country," she said with her unscathed giggle.

She recalled, "The first time my daytime segment was to run, I had to be on Dateline and the Today Show; I was in a few different states in one day – Denver, Colorado, Los Angeles, and San Francisco, California, and Seattle, Washington.

Her first public appearance was with Bryant Gumbel when she went through media training at a studio on the upper west side. "Being reviewed is also unbelievable," she went on in her refreshing way; you may get rave reviews in Esquire, but another literary review may use 'one' of your lines and make you sound stupid."

Susan admits to being a 'situational-recluse,' who is extraordinarily disciplined. "I write the same hour every day, and I have the same number of cups of coffee."

She said writing is an internal sport, not a social sport; it's a weird dichotomy to spend so much time 'alone' writing, and then get out there and develop yourself.

"But, it can do something for your self-esteem," she reassured the group of wishful writers.

She smiled warmly, as she looked at the publishing professor, who is also a fellow-writer, and good friend, and said, "Here I am – I can stand in front of Lou Ann Walker's class and babble."

* * *

Now, at the turn of a new century, with the birth of her first novel, A Member of the Family, the Sag Harbor author reveals the difficult struggle of a fictitious family, the Lathams, in her own hometown, when they adopt a small Romanian boy. As they free him from the neglect and abuse he's known in the Eastern European orphanage, they realize there are no set instructions on how to parent their emotionally distraught new son.

They believe, as almost every loving parent would agree, that 'love can conquer all,' but can a family survive behind the perfection of the white picket fence in the sublimity of a resort community as delicate as the one set in the Hamptons?

"The only difference with the novel, was that the research often involved going inward, rather than going to the library."

It is unheard of to think not.

Can a mother's morality and love endure more than the child's 'Masterpieces of Art' that hang heavy on her heart strings; while the rest of the world around her collapses?

Throughout the pages, it's an extra bonus for us East Enders on Long Island, to drive down a familiar street in Hampton Bays, to see an overworked migrant worker standing on the side of the road, to relate to the annoyance of summer traffic, and to walk on the sands of our beautiful beaches in autumn, with one of the characters in the book.

* * *

The thought, may cross one's mind: with two books under her belt, in the year 2000, and on the eve of her forty-first birthday, has this changed Susan Merrell, the person?

After posing a few questions of my own, the answer was very obvious.

Q: Who was Susan Merrell, the child?

A: I was born in Palo Alto, California, have two elder sisters, and was raised largely in New Haven and other university towns in this country and elsewhere. My father is a mathematical economist, and my mother, a writer. I was a happy and friendly child, but I always had a very solitary side. I was a huge reader from a very early age, and spent a lot of time alone with books and notebooks. So I think I always saw myself as a writer, even from earliest childhood. My childhood, in many ways was quite similar to the one my children are having now. My mother worked at home, writing, so that we never saw her as anything but a stay-at-home mom who had somehow – miraculously – produced books and articles while we slept. And my father, like my husband (architect, James Merrell), was deeply engrossed in his work and apt to keep unusual schedules, but clearly believed the sun rose and set at home.

Q: When I first met you a couple of years ago, you talked about the non-fiction publication of your first work, which took three years to write. How would you compare writing fiction?

A: The only difference with the novel, was that the research often involved going inward, rather than going to the library. I poured my own beliefs more into the novel: it wasn't a reporting of research, but more an examination of how people find themselves in circumstances far more complicated and confusing than they might ever have imagined.

Q: Do you develop the characters from bits and pieces of people you know?

A: Often, I am taken by a gesture or something someone says, and a character just starts to form.

And I continue to add to that character as I'm out and about, or taking a walk, or talking with friends; storing it in the mental file that belongs to that character. I seem to carry the characters around for very long periods of time before I decide what to do with them. Almost all the characters in A Member of the Family had been in my head and appearing in various novel attempts for several years... the characters seemed to move into place as if they'd simply been waiting for this story to get moving.

Q: Did you have flashes of a scene pop into your mind in the middle of the night or while you were out in the strangest places?

A: I often assign myself a problem before I go to sleep – i.e., what would happen if Deborah Latham and Alice Dunn met at the beach? Would they like one another? What would they say? And then I go to sleep. In the morning, I walk right preview: peace fair

By Jerry Cimisi

This Saturday, May 20, from 11 a.m. -2 p.m., the Bridgehampton School will host a "Peace Fair" that will involve the area's schools in the concept and desire for world peace.

"I was sitting on my porch last June," said Carole Montanari of Bridgehampton, "thinking about the new millennium. I thought wouldn't it be great if we could come together as a community and stand for world peace."

Hardly an aspiration anyone could disagree with

— and yet, where do you go from there?

"I presented it to the PTO board," said Carole, who has a fifth grader in the school, "and they said, 'Let's do it.' We put it on the school calendar. Though it's only been in the past few months that we've been working on it."

What exactly will be going on at the Peace Fair this Saturday?

The fair will begin with a procession and the planting of a peace pole outside the school. This is a custom dating back to Japan in 1955, when that country marked the ten year anniversary of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Students from Bridgehampton will place tiles they made on the pole.

The Ross School is displaying a big banner with a message of peace and the Bridgehampton sixth graders will be preseting a letter they addressed to the United Nations. There will be storytelling by Carolyn Calandro, a musical program by Bridgehamptons Music teacher Deborah Martinson down to my computer without allowing my conscious brain to examine whether I have the answer or not, and 99% of the time, when I start writing, the scene comes out."

Susan answered these questions at 6:30 a.m., after waking from sleeping in a tent the night before, along with five children, including two of her own, nine year-old Maggie and five year-old

Jake, and three nephews.

Susan Merrell, the author, has a lot in common with the words in her book — beautiful from cover to cover, as a mother should be.

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO

"Review: Movie Extras"

May 15, 1985

Actors know that auditioning is one of the most oddball ways to get a job. It is, at its best, awkward. The awkwardness of the situation, pitting you and a microscopic display of your talent with an employer, is only one of the many elements that sustain the tension of an audition.

Those other elements, most of which are forms of nervousness, must be electrifying the throng of community hopefuls that are pouring into the First Presbyterian Church in Sag Harbor this week for the chance to become an extra in Alan Alda's movie, Sweet Liberty, scheduled to be filmed this summer. By 2 p.m. on Monday, more than three hundred people had passed by the Extra Casting Director, Bernie Styles. Folks of all types, men and women, boys and girls, even dogs auditioned for the various parts in the film.

Most people who waited patiently for their turn came because they figured, "why not?" People like Joanne Shumaki, a hair dresser from Sag Harbor with no previous acting experience, who was cutting the movie's location manager's hair when she was told by the woman she should go see about getting a part. Though no acting experience is required, such as with Doris Franciso, who was in Compromising Positions, a movie shot in East Hampton last year and due to be released soon.

She arrived with her son, to whom she wanted to show "the not-too-unglamorous side of movie-making." Two ARF dogs attended the auditions, Zeke and Lashes, brought by Nancy Woodward, a board member of ARF.

Mr. Styles sees groups of forty at a time. He gives a short speech on what it means to be an extra in a movie, what extras can expect if they are called to work, and predictions on what extras will say once they get the chance to work in the movie. He then takes an individual Polaroid snapshot of each person in the group and collects a simple casting application, which concludes the most painless of auditions.

He said that an extra in a film should not be seen as a lesser aspect of movie-making. Extras play an important part in any film. However, Mr. Styles stated that his job was more attuned to typecasting. A featured actor has a speaking role, and his character's persona is presented by his appearance, his actions, and his words. An extra does not have a speaking role, so he must look like the type of character he plays. Certain people look like a policeman or a dog catcher, for instance. Mr. Styles' job is to select people for this movie who looked the part.

This movie needs one thousand extras to play various roles. Sweet Liberty is about a college professor in a college town who has written an historical account of a great battle in the American Revolution. A Hollywood movie company has decided to turn his book into a film. The shooting location of the historical film is that college town, somewhere in North Carolina. "Sweet Liberty" becomes a movie within a movie in some respects, and certain extras are needed to play colonial characters and others are needed to play twentieth-century people in the college town. Through the wonder of movie magic, North Carolina will be handsomely represented by Sag Harbor, where most of the film will be shot.

According to Mr. Styles, extras can expect fairly long hours in a day's work. Much of that time will be spent waiting while technicians set up scenes and position cameras. When the time comes to shoot a scene, he said, the extras should be prepared to do the scene more than once, not necessarily because they bungled it, but because the director will want to see the scene shot from many different angles. He also warned that people who become established characters in a certain scene will have to remember to wear the same clothes if the same scene is to be shot on another day, no matter how bad they smell.

Summing up the experience of working in a movie, Mr. Styles chuckled that he guaranteed each person cast as an extra will from then on refer to the movie as "my film." He said after a hard, sweaty, unglamorous day on the set, most people will probably rush home and call all their friends to tell them about their day of filming -

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Observations of a New Islander #106

There's No Business Like Show Business

For Mother's Day my mother, my daughter and I went to The Music Man via the Hampton Jitney Show Tours package advertised in Dan's. I should say here that the Jitney is not paying me for the endorsement I'm about to give.

We arrived at the Southampton Jitney station at 9 a.m. on May 10. All the women I saw waiting were dressed elegantly in mocha and cream tones. I caught sight of myself in mirror, a big gal in purple pants, lime green sweater, bordello Red lipstick, red hair with ornaments sticking out, Birkenstocks and a black patent purse. I smiled. You see, I never run the risk of not being noticed, and damn if I didn't pull it off again! Hee-haw goes to Broadway.

The Jitney was clean and comfortable. The only scary thing was that the bathroom door in the back of the bus was so narrow I knew several of the people on board couldn't fit through. Next time I'll bring a little jar of vaseline to lube up the door frame in case I get desperate enough to try it.

I didn't dare risk it on this trip because I had visions of New York City firemen using the Jaws of Life to unwedge me from the bathroom door while everyone was in the theatre watching the show...

Lucy was our driver and Jennifer was our hostess. She fed us all the way there. The first stop was Giambelli's restaurant. A very nice restaurant full of handsome Italian waiters, all speaking Italian. I didn't pay much attention to the food because I was too busy in the Men's Room trying to figure out how to write my name, phone number and "For a good time call..." on the wall in Italian. My mother said the food was delicious and the presentation was excellent. My only complaint was that we had to walk a flight of stairs and that was very difficult on several of the seniors in our group.

As we exited, the Maitre'd gave each woman a light pink rose. One idiot stuck the rose in her hair. Jennifer guided us everywhere and Lucy the driver had the Jitney waiting right in front of the restaurant. Lucy navigated crowds, construction and Acts of God, and got us to the theatre with time to spare and without once dislodging the rose sprouting from my chignon.

We saw The Music Man. WOW! Costumes, production, sets, dancing and acting, a four star event! I was hesitant to allow anyone but Robert Preston to be The Music Man, but Craig Bierko puts that fear to rest in the first scene. His voice sounds like Preston's. I can see he uses some of Robert's postures and gestures, but his eyes say everything the script can't. He quickly owns the role.

With all due respect to Shirley Jones, the voice of Rebecca Luker, who played Marian Paroo, was a singular, heart melting experience. What a gift.

So many sopranos are shrill and you can't make out the lyrics, but Rebecca's voice is mellow despite its high range. She doesn't push up to the notes, she lands from above and with perfect diction. She alone could justify making a CD of this show.

ROSS SCHOOL 18 GOODFRIEND DRIVE EAST HAMPTON, NY 11937 WWW.ROSS.ORG

elaine k.g. benson, her daughter's column

I don't understand why we tend to be so short sighted. We often look for the differences in our fellow man. You've heard the term, "Women are from Venus, men are from Mars." We are still both human beings. It may seem that we are different creatures but in fact we are the same.

The census is being taken. There is a column that asks about race. I checked that I'm black, white, Latin, and Chinese. I then wrote in "all of the above." I will not be told that I can only be one thing. When I'm in Mexico my neighbors treat me as one of the community. This past winter, a little girl who's known me for years was surprised that I'm not Mexican. When asked, I say I converted.

A friend in Mexico wanted me to become the Godmother to her child. I said I didn't think that the priest would except me in that I can't raise the child within the Catholic faith. I said I was born Jewish. The friend didn't miss a beat in asking what that means and finally saying, "but you must be Catholic, too!" I don't think so. It had never occurred to her that there are people who are not Catholic. I can safely say that I'm Jewish, Quaker, Hindu, and have a little Taoism thrown in. Again it sounds like I could check all of the above. There is plenty of common ground. You can find a common chord with anyone.

I've been talking to Bill Smith at Fish Unlimited. He's trying to keep me informed about the lobster diseases and other problems in our immediate area. Fish Unlimited is an international organization. The fish don't know when they've passed into foreign waters. The gray whales migrate through three countries to travel from their winter to summer residence and back again. If we're going to protect the whales, we have to ignore the borders. We have to join forces. We have to be aware of what's happening in Connecticut and Nassau County. The lobsters don't know the difference. They don't know about politics.

I've been trying to enlist some aid in bringing sewage treatment to northern Magdalena Bay. The Bay is a destination for gray whales. It is heavily contaminated. There is a town of two thousand people on the northern end of the Bay and there is no sewage treatment. Fish Unlimited is willing to help. Bill Smith is clear. We need to look at the whole picture. If we're going to protect our fish, we have to do it on a planet-wide basis.

There are new signs on the highway that say that we are in the path of the coastal evacuation route. If there is a problem at Millstone Nuclear reactor, the radioactive fallout will not stay in Connecticut. We are in the path of destruction. We have no power over politics in Connecticut. but the Connecticut politicians certainly have power over us. It's one world. If there's a problem in Russia, we will feel it here. A problem in Los Alamos, New Mexico could have far reaching repercussions. A problem anywhere on the planet effects the atmosphere. Nuclear waste is a planet-wide problem.

I like to read about local politics and raise money for local charities. I'm aware I'm being provincial. There is a bigger picture. —Kimberly Goff we do owe it to our ancestors, and to the Earth herself – and to our future generations. We owe it to our ancestors to defend – our Mother Earth.”

Native American Task Force spokesperson, Sally Morin, an Algonquin Indian, whose tribe resides in Canada, explained the concept of land-ownership from the point of view of the Indian people. “At one time all the land on this continent was roamed by Indians, but when you let people live on land long enough they begin to think they own it. We don’t own the land. We are only on the land to live on it. On our reservation we cannot sell our land. We are permitted to live on it and to take care of it. There is no such thing as owning a living thing.”

Shinnecock Indian, Jennifer E. Cuffee-Wilson, was the final speaker to express her sadness over the disrespect for the culture of the Shinnecock people by the community. She spoke about her heritage as a Shinnecock Indian and expressed her hope for the land and for future generations. “It makes me really sad,” she said. “We are really very overwhelmed. We do not dig up the graves in other people’s cemeteries. Why are they desecrating the remains of our ancestors? This really saddens me.”

Ruben Valdez ended the event with the following recorded statement:

“In response to the destruction of lands, the case of which has been stepped up in the last few years, as perhaps the Town Planning Board realizes that the Shinnecock natives may have a very strong land case against their colonial claims to these lands.

“In response in 1978, after our Federal inquiry, they began to hand out, like water, the permits allowing the development, individually and by subdivision, of land up behind the Southampton College.

“Southampton College, as well, is on a piece of land that we have claimed as our own and was our traditional territory before 1859.

“None of these people have clear title, by Englishman’s rules, to these lands. They were undoubtedly supposed to be for the wanderings of the Shinnecock natives, and their guests. Let us not forget that.

“We, in response, built a commission called the Shinnecock Land Defense Committee, which is part of our Tribal Council. In response to the terrible things that have been going on in this town we have empowered ourselves, and that is how events like this have come to occur.”

A series of future events will be taking place in rapid succession, and will include consciousness raising Jim Thorpe style runs on open beaches, and a long-distance run being organized by the American Indian Movement (AIM).

A March for Mother Earth will take place May 29, noon-2 p.m. People will gather on Narrow Lane in Southampton near the track field of Southampton High School. The route will be along Hampton Road to Main Street, down Jobs Lane and conclude at Agawam Park.

People who may wish to offer their support to this land awareness movement are encouraged to contact the Shinnecock Land Defense Committee at: 631-287-3200.

HEADLINE NEWS

Trial Begins in Shelter Island's First – And Only – Murder

Jury selection has begun in Riverhead for the first and only case of murder in three and a half centuries. In April, 1998, Kenneth H. Payne III was arrested for killing a neighbor and longtime friend, Curtis Cook. But many people on the island feel that Payne was justified in his actions. At the time, Cook was out on bail for two weeks after having been charged with molesting and sodomizing an eight year old girl in July, 1997.

Payne has two other children. He has been separated from his wife for five years and lives apart from his family.

Payne's defense is likely to be that he believed Curtis to be an immediate threat to his daughter.

Swimmer to Trace Path of Flight 800

To help raise money for a memorial to the 230 people who died on TWA Flight 800 in July, 1996, Tom Gallagher of Seaford will swim along the flight path of the plane, from Far Rockaway near JFK to Smith Point Park in Shirley. Gallagher will swim approximately eight miles a day for six days.

A $1.5 million memorial is planned to be completed at Smith Point Park by the fifth anniversary of the crash, which would be July 17, 2001. Eight granite slabs will face the ocean. On one side of the slabs will be names of the 230 victims who perished in the tragedy; on the other will be an equal number of doves against a sunset.

Families of the victims of Flight 800 have raised about $250,000 for the memorial thus far; New York State has set aside $100,000 towards the memorial. Gallagher is trying to secure corporate sponsorship for his swim. He will wear the logos of sponsors on his wetsuit.

Path in Bridgehampton, connecting Noyack Lane and Deerfield Road.

Laying out the many maps I used as reference aids in drawing the new roads onto the Dan's Papers map (the secret is out), I did notice that the new Hammond map showed my road but did not have a name for it. Get with the program, guys, this is my claim for immortality.

Another thing I noticed about the names of these new roads is that almost every one of them lacked the originality of some of the old colonial roads. In addition to the aforementioned new names from nature, Deer Run, Blueberry Court, Whippoorwill Lane and so forth, they would give their roads names to indicate wealth and exclusivity – with names that had the words Jeeves or Bentley or Montclair in them. There was nothing that even came close to some of the older names, such as Highway Behind the Pond or Widow Gavitt's Path. Or Springy Banks to Hands Creek Road, or, one of my favorites, Swamp Road.

Up in Water Mill, however, I did find a small development that I had apparently simply missed in doing my map and has been there for fifteen years. One of its three roads was Lyme Drive, an unfortunate name, since about a dozen years ago they discovered Lyme disease was a serious matter. Perhaps the developer is in the process of trying to change it now.

In any case, the new Dan's Papers Fortieth Anniversary Road Map should be available in the first week of June throughout the Hamptons. Look for it and see if you can find the various names I've made up. Go out and drive those roads and see if any road signs have been put up on any of them yet. I'd like to know.

onstage, Bierko has to fight for the audience. Max sounds like Buddy Hackett. I think the Director, Susan Stroman went for sound-alikes to make it easier for the audience to accept these new incarnations of beloved characters, and it works beautifully.

Kudos to Stroman for inspired casting. The audience took special note of Clyde Alves, playing Tommy Djilas. Tommy is a minor role in the movie, but not with Clyde in it. His dancing includes back-flips and rotating spins about four feet in the air. You will hear from this boy again...

The Finale is everything you want a Finale to be, long, loud, stand-up and cheer! No, it was Stand-Up and Scream! They got your seventy-six trombones right heah honey. This is the one show to see if you can only see one!

After the fantastic show, we exited the theatre and Lucy once again was parked directly opposite the door. On the way home, Jennifer served champagne and treats. I met a fellow Sweet Adeline and we discussed our one complaint that Stroman didn't use a real barbershop quartet that could act, she used actors that could sing. They did a passable job as a quartet, I'd give them a B- as a quartet. I believe Stroman would have cast a professional quartet if given the chance to hear the difference. She went First Cabin with everything else, this one just got by her.

In conclusion, I can safely recommend the Hampton Jitney Show Tours to you. Jennifer and Lucy did a great job of making the entire experience stress free and enjoyable. I advise you not to eat too many of the snacks on the way in because lunch is first. And don't let your mother drink too much champagne on the way home and start singing, "There were bells on the dells, but I never heard them in the singing on the hills with the smells... okay, everybody sing..." •

Shop 'Til' You Drop ...With Maria Tennariello

With the weather being so warm and balmy, I thought that this weekend would be perfect to take a trip to Greenport for some shopping. The ferry rides were delicious, and in no time at all, my friend John, my grandson Anthony and myself found ourselves in the quaint little village of Greenport. So let's shop!

Passing by Lydia's Antiques and Stained Glass

on Main Street I spotted a replica of an antique leaded glass fireplace screen that was done in a basket of roses. I flipped! The screen was reasonably priced at $299. As we walked through the shop, I was amazed to see how much merchandise was under one roof. There were plenty of antique leaded lamps and chandeliers, bookcases, desks, dressers, odd pieces and more. Lydia also does custom stained glass windows that will warm any home. What a nice way to start the day!

On Front Street I found a little hidden treasure. Haag Todd Home has the look of a "seaside cottage." Located in the Front Street Garden, right across from the new Mitchell Park, Haag Todd Home brings a new dimension to Greenport's retail community, combining fine antiques and found-objects with home furnishings classics. The "found objects" spans the mid-19th century through the mid-20th century. Vintage furnishings include cupboards, tables, chairs, benches, dressers, beds, and outdoor furniture. Design accessories include glassware, pottery, spreads and quilts, tablecloths, artwork, mirrors, kitchen items and coastal artifacts. Among the contemporary classics are handmade pillows, Iowa farm blankets and original artwork. This "Seaside Cottage" look is simple and whimsy. And...East End residents will be able to purchase "Weekender" gifts, the perfect greeting package for your weekend guests. Call 323-2752 for information. Thank's for the tour Todd.

On the corner also facing the new park I loved East of the Moon and the owner Betsy walked me through showing me all the very eclectic merchandise. There were beautiful fringed shawls, beaded shawls, fabulous jewelry, candle holders, hand painted photo frames, made shop. It was packed with kites, banners, flags, toys, cards, and all types of animals including dinosaurs (his favorite). Of course I didn't leave there without buying him one...

Nearby at Rose & Dee's jewelry and crafts were on the agenda. There were beautiful lamps, tables, mirrors and more. This is a shop I definitely will spend more time in, on the next trip to Greenport.

Last but not least, Coastal Candleworks caught my eye. Candles in every shape and form, the floral candles looked like fine china, no kidding. The owner makes them himself and holds candle shaving sessions. Each candle has an inside color, an accent color, and an outside color that is protected with a high-gloss, clear, acrylic glaze. Prices are certainly affordable; they range from $24.99 to $44.99. The wedding candle was exceptional and a great shower gift for the new bride. Custom color candles are also available. Call 477-3515 for information.

Well, time to call it a day. Lot's of great shopping in Greenport and I will be glad to come back. The ferry ride home was just as enjoyable as it was on the way there. I had lots of goodies to take home and I will be back Greenport!

Until next time. Ciao and Happy Shopping!

Haag Todd Home

by Betsy herself, garden faucets, wind chimes, bird baths and feeders. You name it, she had it! John and Anthony followed me through the shop and enjoyed every minute of it. The shop has a special spiritual feel to it and it's definitely worth the trip. Betsy, you can be sure I'll be back. Drop in or call her at 477-9544, and tell her I said hi!

Steps away Anthony spotted the Nature's Wild Side

The Custer Institute, A Wonderful Community Treasure

The Custer Institute, that Gem of the North Fork, had its twenty-first annual Astronomy Jamboree amid more political and environmental controversy than it has witnessed in the entire past seventy-three years since its start in 1927 at the home of Charles W. Elmer in Cedar Beach. The State Assembly Environmental Conservation Committee is working on bill A6357 and the State Senate Environmental Conservation Committee is crafting bill S6799, both addressing Light Pollution Issues. Most importantly, the Town of Southold has just this past week unanimously voted to purchase the six acres adjacent to the institute, as a shield against development and the introduction of unwanted light that could have essentially shut down the institute. While this purchase will go a long way toward protecting the future of the Custer Institute, and the Town of Southold is to be applauded for its timely efforts, the issue of designating this area of the North Fork as a low light area is still before State Legislature. Light pollution is a subject Susan Rose, President of the Amateur Observer's Society of New York, Inc., is very concerned about. She has witnessed her members moving over the years from Brooklyn, to Nassau County, to Suffolk to the East End, in search of dark sky areas to observe. The possibility of future new development and the insensitive light trespass, by use of non-directed light fixtures by both commercial and private ventures, threaten not only the institute, but are a source of disturbance to any back-yard stargazer. Often it is just a matter of upgrading to the new full-cover fixtures or minimally covering a light fixture to direct the light where it was intended, downward. Incidentally, these new fixture can pay for themselves in a short period of time as they are much more energy efficient, a point that, according to Susan Rose, has been noted by LIPA.

The three day Astronomy Jamboree began on Friday evening with music, poetry and wine in the Stokes Memorial Hall, at the Custer Institute, while upstairs the Observatory Staff, Michael Wall, 17, of Mattituck, and Collin Baker, 15, of Orient, set up the great telescope for nighttime viewing in the revolving astronomical dome. Astrological enthusiasts were gathering in the lawn area below, setting up the latest computerized telescopes, while Rico Verticchio, a machinist, focused the 6-foot long binoculars he built between 1994 and 1997.

On Saturday the festivities continued from the Southold Town Recreation Center, to accommodate the large audience. "The Anticythera Mechanism," by Bob Deroski, a local Custer Institute member, opened the day's presentations to be followed by "The One Double Occultation" by Craig Small, a Hayden Planetarium Lecturer. It is important to note that the Custer Institute seems to be a hot bed of Hayden Planetarium alumni, including the dynamic speaker and legendary Dr. Fred Hess who was honored for having lectured at every single Jamboree for all 21 years. The Institute honored Dr. Hess by naming the Key Note Speech for all future jamborees "The Dr. Fred Hess Lecture." Harold A. Parnham, Hap, presented a lecture "Steering your way through the Stars," about celestial navigation, a subject of great local interest. Dr. Scott McLennan of Stony Brook University, Department of Geosciences, enthralled the audience with "The Surface of Mars," followed by Dr. Robert Pappalardo of Brown University's Geosciences Department, and a first Custer Institute Jamboree participant as a high school student on Long Island. Dr. Pappalardo presented "The Hidden Ocean of Europa," the moon of Jupiter that presents the highest likelihood of life in our solar system. His study of the pictures from NASA's Galileo Europa Mission (GEM) to Jupiter was spectacular. The first Dr. Fred Hess Lecture given by Dr. Lawrence Marshall of Gettysburg College, "Looking for Those Elusive Asteroids" sparked great enthusiasm as he explained the jump from 9,000 known asteroids in 1991 to over 72,000 known asteroids today. According to the Dr. Marshall this is the field of interest most influenced by amateur astronomers, those back-yard astrologists armed with the latest computerized telescopes and laptops with software newly available to the home adventurers.

Sunday morning the true fanatics gathered at Orient Point State Park at 4:00 in the morning to watch the "Green Flash", a phenomenon that is rare and occurs only at sunrise, on a clear horizon. The jamboree concluded with a nature walk then coffee back at the institute.

Throughout the weekend, littlest in attendance, but certainly not least was 8 year old Peter Kreppein of Cutchogue. He sat in the first seat of the front row and listened intently to each presentation and asked the most astute questions, astounding the adults sitting around him, including me. Peter was clearly mesmerized by the subject, and I will store away his name in my mental database, just in case he is the first interplanetary astronaut, or the next Stephen Hawkins.

If space is the next frontier, then the Custer Institute is certainly a most important doorway to that adventure. If you are concerned about light pollution you can contact The Amateur Observer's Society of New York, Inc. 1-718-347-4163 or amateurobservers@hotmail.com. To be a part of the future of the wonderful Custer Institute you can contact The Custer Institute, P.O. Box 1204, Bayview Rd, Southold, 11971. Check out the web site for events at <http://www.custerobservatory.org> or just join the "Star Party" any clear Saturday evening all year.

Journey on an Old Railroad in New Mexico

The ritual whoops of the whistle at dirt road crossings come to an end, and amid eruptions of sweet-smelling smoke, the old steam engine begins the serious business of hauling us up out of a grassy valley that itself is almost 8,000 feet above sea level. The clatter and clunk of iron wheels on narrow-gauge iron rails drum a wacky but relaxing counterpoint to the sturdy, steady beat of the engine's great pistons. Three pronghorn antelope eye us from a safe distance in their ancestral Pleistocene lands.

Along with about two dozen other passengers, we chose to ride in an open car at the end of 12 enclosed ones. We are embarked on a 6 1/2-hour journey aboard North America's longest and highest narrow-gauge steam railroad, the Cumbres & Toltec Scenic Railroad, part of a late 19th-century network of trains that hauled gold, silver, coal, and timber from the Rocky Mountains to commercial depots. The locomotives, cars, and 64 miles of track between Chama, New Mexico, and Antonito, Colorado, were rescued from oblivion by the two states in 1970 and refurbished.

In fact, two trains run daily: one from Antonito south and west to a midpoint called Osier, the other north and east from Chama to Osier. There the engines switch trains, the seat backs are adjusted, and each train is hauled back to its point of origin.

Yesterday we drove to the railhead at Chama, some three hours north of Albuquerque, spent the night, and decided to take the option of starting at Antonito. An eight o'clock van ran us for an hour through oaks—all burnished ochers and burnt sienna—and over mountain passes to the old Hispanic farming town. We took a seat in the open car, carrying sweaters and jackets against the wayward potential of high mountain weather.

With a milepost-by-milepost guidebook in hand, I was prepared to match the annotated history of the route—its old water stations and sidings, its complex glacial and volcanic geology—to each passing moment. A scholarly sort of enterprise, I thought.

But I am distracted by the show.

Writhing through the switch-backs, gaining altitude with saintly mechanical patience, the train takes us where, as one passenger says, "You could be a million miles from home." We rise from high plains to montane forest, where distant tongues and veins of golden autumn aspens sweep into secret valleys and surge among green-black stands of conifers blanketing old peaks. The train curves back on itself and passes through an aspen grove suffused with yellow light, the flat-stemmed leaves fluttering in the breeze, the ground littered as if with doubloons.

They are called quaking aspens, but they seem flamboyant, not quaking, and I think of them as devil-may-care partygoers having a last floozy-like fling among the dark self-assurance of spruce trees and ponderosa pines. Are the good burgher evergreens a bit embarrassed by all this silly gaiety in their midst, or do they take vicarious pleasure from it? A nonsensical thought, I realize, but on the other hand, why take a century-old conveyance along the top of the world if you are bent on conventional reasoning? Who can concentrate on the prose of the world when the sky overhead is so intensely blue, the mountains such a bold palette of gold and green? I notice subtleties among the brazen colors—strokes of peach, tangerine, lime (aspens not yet at the party), and feathery gray swaths (aspen clans who have had their fling). In the crystal of the high mountain day, the world is personified.

Shop'til You Drop.....With Maria Tennariello

Spring is really springing into summer and the Hamptons are buzzing with shoppers gearing for the happily awaited season. Let's do a little shopping.

Hot off the press, fashions, friends and fun highlight the East End Open Kick-Off Party being held on Saturday, May 20, from 7 to 11 p.m. at the Casa Basso restaurant in Westhampton. This fun evening includes a fashion show by Lon Sabella et Daniel of Westhampton, music by the funky R&B band, "Four Lost Souls" and a delicious buffet prepared by Casa Basso.

Porch & Patio on Montauk Highway in East Quogue has plenty of outdoor furniture, grills and accessories in stock and ready to be delivered right to your home for the Memorial Day holiday.

Off to Southampton to DMC Accessories on Jobs Lane for a look at the summer arrivals of animal prints that are running wild, headbands, scunci's, jewelry, handbags and more. I especially loved the "more the merrier" beaded bracelets, and eclectic handbags, hair ornaments that are packed to the rafters. DMC Accessories greets the hazy days of summer with their usual splash of beach bags, straw hats, straw bags and for the evening, gorgeous silks and taffeta as well as crochet bags. If you're looking for that perfect gift for the "perfect?" man in your life, check out the briefcases, organizers and wallets as well as the new and exciting butter soft leather goods that are tradition at DMC, who is celebrating their fifth season in Southampton.

Job's Lane's Nancy & Co. in Southampton has cool clothing in all sizes for all women.

On the corner of Main Street at Saks Fifth Avenue I finally caught their Clinique ten-piece gift package, Spring Essentials that is yours and yours alone with any Clinique purchase of $35 or more. The go-anywhere travel bag is packed with all your favorite Clinique items. Go for it, it's Saks exclusive.

Lisan & Co. on Butter Lane in Bridgehampton is literally stacked to the rafters with new merchandise from Sante Fe, New Mexico. Anna is still unpacking getting it ready to display in her shop in the Bridgehampton Commons. There are corner china cabinets, mirrors, mantles, pedestals, frames, trunks, tables, accessories and much more to choose from. My friend Jill bought a beautiful teak wood coffee table for her new apartment. What a buy! And...Anna is waiting for another shipment soon, so the prices are right!

Lisan & Co

At Pulver Gas on Main Street, you should check out the big barbecue sale that is going on. Get your gift ready for dad on Father's Day that is right around the corner. There are several gift packages that are specially priced for this sale. Call for information at 537-0930. The sale continues until the end of May. The early bird always gets the worm.

Treasure Island nicely located at the Wainscott Village Center on the Montauk Highway is packed to the rafters with two shopping levels that are filled great summer outdoor merchandise. Check out their craft shop and silk flower department as well.

What's doing at The Elegant John? Well, there is a wonderful "Wamsutta cotton sheet sale" going on at great discount prices. All the merchandise at The Elegant John are Madison Avenue quality at factory prices. Goose down pillows are reduced to $45.99 for standard to $69.99 for king size. Then there is always the lowest prices on bed linens, duvet covers, shams, skirts, coverlets, towels and 100% cotton sheets. Located at the Red Horse Plaza on Montauk Highway, East Hampton, this store is definitely worth the trip!

Nearby at Architrove, you will find lighting in all dimensions and furniture that you will really love to see in your home.

Heading home, I stopped off at Zinnia on Main Street in Sag Harbor where I found lot's to choose from. Zinnia carries sizes from two to sixteen and their clothing and accessories are for all women of all ages.

Home sweet home, time to put my feet up and relax before I go out to dinner with an old friend that came all the way out east to visit me. Guess it will be Giordano's Restaurant on Noyac Road for their famous "Pasta Night Special." A good deal at $11.95 for a three courser. Hey, but I'm worth it.

Until next week. Ciao and Happy Shopping!

PHOTOGRAPHY AT BELLPORT'S BEACON GALLERY

Now that the weather is warming up and spring flowers are blooming, a trip to nearby Bellport seems appropriate. While not considered part of the Hamptons, this small village near the ocean evokes a more distant past, one filled with character and charm but no invading tourists. The Beacon Gallery, inhabiting the second floor of a large white house, reinforces Bellport's relaxed atmosphere; the house itself could have been plucked from any number of cities in the deep South.

Photographer Marianne Engberg's "Beam of Light" series mirrors both the gallery's gentle and genteel ambience as well with "dream-like" images. Using the pinhole technique that allows her to "paint with light, moving shadows, mixing sun with shade," Ms. Engberg's flowers and abstract shapes are aesthetically pleasing.

However, the works have another dimension which are probably not associated with pinhole imagery and light. Her "Layer on Layer," for example, resembles a collage where paper is torn; another piece looks like shattered glass that has fallen randomly to the floor. The photographer's "Lost Tribe" series is another case where light is not necessarily the salient element: separate profiles of faces on each of nine squares replicate a pictograph.

Photographs by Susan Kravitz offer an entirely different genre and technique: a series of diptychs where two images, printed together, convey people/objects in an isolated setting. Here "isolated" means a generalized locale, where time and place are not specified.

This observation is both the series' strength and weakness. Simply put, it's difficult to grasp the purpose of the series. While it doesn't appear to have a socio/political bent, there's a hint of a theme with recurring mask images. People also don't seem to be relating to each other if there are human beings in the shot at all.

The series does not suggest a clear, definitive statement, although this in itself may not be negative. However, it must be noted that, like Ms. Engberg's series, Ms. Kravitz uses light and shape to good advantage. One photograph, particularly, is most provocative—a man and woman entering what resembles a phone booth. The imagery engages our imagination as we ponder the couple's "story."

Both photographers' work will be on view at Bellport's Beacon Gallery (112 South Country Road) until May 27.

Flora, Marianne Engberg

HONORING THE ARTIST: AMY ZERNER

It's not often that we run across someone who's a truly integrated person, yet artist Amy Zerner seems to be heading in that direction: combining both business and art; the practical and spiritual; and the professional and personal.

First, the symbiotic relationship that exists between Ms. Zerner's company, Enchanted World (which she shares with husband, Monte Farber) and her art—that includes not only her well-known tapestry pieces but also a new line of jewelry, posters, throw blankets, and candles. "The internet has really given us a lot of opportunities to make my art available to people," Ms. Zerner explains. "For example, now people can have a poster made of their favorite Goddess or Oracle who appear in my Cupid Cards or books. My work is also now less expensive on the internet, like the intricately carved Goddesses that I create."

If Ms. Zerner seems as if she's obsessed with marketing devices, we can assure you that she is not. (As she notes, "Artists say they are not good at business, but business is like creating art. It's all about communication.") New technology has simply created more chances for Ms. Zerner to be creative. And besides, she has been a recognized fine artist for several years before the advent of any technology whatsoever. Her clothes, for example, are all hand made, using a variety of fabrics collected from all over the world. Most are a result of extensive research on Ms. Zerner's part, reflecting the wearer's astrological sign.

Fueling Ms. Zerner's art and her wish to make it more accessible is her spiritual philosophy. Such philosophy has been termed a kind of New Age approach, but Ms. Zerner doesn't feel completely comfortable with the expression, New Age. "My way of living developed from Eastern religions and meditation in the 1960s," she says with commitment. "It's an everyday practical religion not linked to orthodoxy."

Indeed, the practical part seems very appropriate and reasonable in this particular day and age. Ms. Zerner talks about ways to deal with stress ("Take a bath with Kosher salt") and personal anxieties ("Say affirming things, like 'I'm good enough the way I am.'").

While Ms. Zerner is the first to admit that affirmation can't cure everything, we're still curious about the origin of such a positive, yet somewhat mysterious, world vision. "My mother used to read me fairy tales when I was young," she answers. "And I remember drawing goddesses and practicing ESP, too. Also meeting other people who shared my view. I was encouraged to trust our sixth sense. I'm also an Aries; I just react to things spontaneously. I just jump in."

Finally, there's Ms. Zerner's affinity for both the professional and the personal. Despite her good marketing ideas about reaching people, she is basically just someone who takes joy in helping others. For instance, giving astrological readings gratis is one way she reaches out. Bringing insight into people's life is what makes Ms. Zerner happy. And with that insight comes her own inner development.

—Marion Wolberg Weiss

Ms. Zerner will be exhibiting her jewelry at Bridgehampton's Elaine Benson Gallery until May 29; her wearable art will be on view there from July 15-August 1. Her website: www.TheEnchantedWorld.com

Dan's Papers "They Made The Movie Here" Film Festival 2000

The final presentation of this season's Dan's Papers' FREE Film Festival of "Movies Made Here" takes place this Saturday May 20th at 3:00 p.m. at its new location of rare provocative comfort..The Ross School Library at 18 Goodfriend Drive, off Route 114 in East Hampton. The film is the haunting Grey Gardens, a documentary style, all-too-intimate portrait of Big Edie and Little Edie, as they came to be called... Edith Bouvier Beale and her daughter, Edie. Following the screening, for the discussion period, we are pleased to have Lois Wright, as a guest, to speak with the audience. She was a close friend of the two Edies and appears in the film.

The film, made by brothers, David and Albert Maysles in 1974, and released in 1976, made cult figures of Big Edith, then 79, and Little Edie, then 56, partly because, as the name implies, they were Aunt and first cousin to Jacqueline Onassis, but mostly, because the two were extraordinary women with a complex relationship to the outside world and themselves.

Grey Gardens Screening Date: May 20, 2000

In 1923, Edith and Phelan Beale bought a house and four acre estate with impressive grounds designed by the previous owner, noted gardener, Anna Gilman Hill, who named it Grey Gardens. The Beale's separated three years after the purchase of the place, but Edie continued to summer at Grey Gardens. With the death of her ex-husband and father in 1956 and 1957, Edith lost her income and she and Little Edie went on to live in the house full time.

"Big" Edie was just that... BIG.. big in life and as life. She loved to sing... anywhere! Little Edie, too, loved to sing and dance.

The Maysles with Ellen Hovde, Muffie Meyer, and Susan Froemke, give you a rather thick slice of their life. What they and their cameras saw, and what they put together, is what you get. You are permitted into a very private world and time with two women who are suddenly willing, and at times, anxious to engage you. Sometimes their openness is extremely poignant as they create a sort of poetic fantasy.

Remember, however, Grey Gardens, is just a slice of their lives...a momentary period without a past only a great presence. This is why I've given a little background here. Beyond this, there is that wide, wide lifetime that formed these women. You will have to fill in the chasm...write your own scenario, so to speak. It might be up there with Tennessee Williams. Maybe this is one of the film's great assets...aside, of course, from the remarkable central figures.

Guy Jean de Fraumeni is the producer, writer and director of award-winning films for ABC, NBC, PBS, and European feature films. He is assisted in this column by Sarah Halsey who hosts the above mentioned Dan's Papers film festival "They Made the Film Here".

silvia lehrer's cooking column

It's feel good time just to see the many colors of spring visible at the farmers markets and farm stands that are opening at a brisk pace here on the East End. With longer, sunny days warming us, we are in prime time to enjoy the bounty fresh from the growers.

Some of that bounty turned up in Henry Griffo's vegetable frittata. Our good friend Mary Griffo called recently to ask us over for Henry's vegetable frittata and to see a film on their large screen TV. "That's it," Mary said, "frittata and a movie." The answer was a resounding yes.

It's great having friends who love to cook and who enjoy sharing their creations! Generous with vegetables, the terrific fritatta was notable for the taste of each distinctive ingredient. And, of course, that wasn't it. Mary dressed an organic salad of mixed greens and sweet tomatoes with a yummy vinaigrette and topped it with toasted sunflower seeds. Her unanticipated apricot tart dessert was a deliciously light finish to the meal before settling down to another feast, the wonderful classic, Babette's Feast.

Exploring more goodies at farm stands brings to mind an exquisite soup I enjoyed in Lucca, Italy some years ago. Tiny pieces of leek, green onions, fava beans and carrots floated like jewels in the clear broth. There are many wonderful reasons to remember Lucca, and this soup is one of them.

HENRY GRIFFO'S FRITTATA PRIMAVERA

Artichokes, asparagus, spring onions and mushrooms, cook separately to incorporate into eggs to form a low cake. Frittata can be served cold for an appetizer or warm for a light main supper dish. Henry suggests using whatever fresh vegetables you find appealing and also whatever leftovers you may have.

Serves 4-6

4-6 medium artichokes
1 halved lemon
10-12 asparagus spears
6-8 spring onions or 1 bunch scallions
1/3 pound white or crimini mushrooms
2-3 tablespoons olive oil
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
10 large eggs
2 strips bacon (optional), cooked until lightly crisped

1. Begin preparing artichokes by bending back and snapping off the outer leaves. Do not pull the leaves off all the way since the whitish bottom of the leaves are tender, and edible. Keep pulling off the leaves until you get to the central cone that are green only at the tips and whose paler base is at least 1 1/2 inches high. Slice at least one inch off the top of the inedible portion of the central cone. Rub the surface of each artichoke with the cut side of a lemon, squeezing the juice over the cut portions so they won't discolor. With a metal spoon, scoop out the inside hair of the choke completely and discard. Put the pieces in a bowl of cold water with the squeezed lemon to soak for 10 minutes. Drain; dry thoroughly in a clean kitchen towel and cut into quarters.

2. Snap off the tough base of asparagus where they naturally break. Peel or trim the points along the stems as you wish. Soak in cold water for 10 minutes. Drain and dry thoroughly then cut into one-inch pieces. Slice off ends of mushroom stems. Wipe caps clean with a damp cloth then slice and dice. Dry thoroughly. Trim spring onions or scallions of any bruised areas leaving on part of the green stems. Rinse and dry thoroughly and cut into one-inch pieces.

3. Heat oil in a 12-inch non-stick skillet, and saute the onions for 4-5 minutes. Do not allow to brown. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Push to the side of the pan and saute the artichoke hearts and asparagus for 4-5 minutes until they just begin to brown lightly. Move the vegetables to the side of the pan and saute mushrooms until lightly browned. If using bacon, cut it into small dice and add to the vegetables at this time. Stir to distribute the ingredients evenly throughout the skillet. Can be done up to an hour or two ahead at this point.

Preheat oven to 325 degrees.

5. Beat the eggs in a bowl with a tablespoon or two of water and salt and pepper to taste. Pour over the vegetables in the skillet and cook over low heat for about 10 minutes. Place frittata in the oven and cook for 6-8 minutes longer until frittata is not runny. Do not brown. Transfer to a serving plate. Slice into wedges and serve warm.

Note: If the handle on your skillet is plastic and not metal, wrap the handle with a couple of layers of aluminum foil to protect it while in the oven.

SPRING GREEN SOUP

Tiny pieces of leek, green onions, fava beans and carrots for a touch of color, float like jewels in the clear broth.

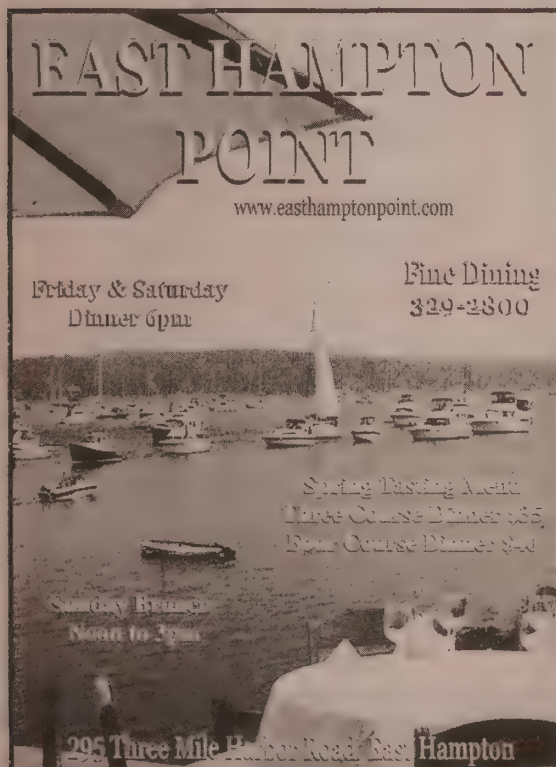

Serves 8

2 large leeks
1 bunch spring onions or scallions
2/3 pound fresh fava beans
2 tablespoons olive oil
3-4 carrots, peeled and shredded
8 cups chicken broth
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
Dill sprigs for garnish

1. Trim away outer green leaves of leeks and discard. Leeks are a sandy vegetable; cut them lengthwise and spread the layers under running water to rinse off the sand. Soak in water for 10-15 minutes. Squeeze leeks dry then cut off root end and discard. Cut crosswise into thin slices. Set aside. Trim spring onions or scallions of any bruised areas leaving on part of the green stems. Shell the fava beans then drop them into salted boiling water for 30 seconds (no longer or they will be mushy). Drain and put into bowl of ice water to quickly cool. It is important to remove the outer shell. Slit each pod with your nail and pop out the bean. (This procedure can be a little labor intensive, but worth it.) Set aside.

2. Warm the oil in a large (5 1/2 quart) saucepan and put in the leeks and scallions. Saute the vegetables for 2-3 minutes, stirring occasionally. Add carrots and cook for 1 minute longer. Pour in the broth and bring to the edge of a boil. Season with salt and pepper to taste and simmer for 20-25 minutes. Add fava beans, taste for seasoning and simmer for 2-3 minutes longer. Serve hot with dill garnish.

It's Our Garden WITH ELIZABETH AND CROW MILLER

Summer Squash. Midsummer Vegetable

In the dead of winter what fresh vegetable do we miss the most? The first name that comes to mind is summer squash. To us summer squash is a symbol of midsummer, the opposite of cold and snow.

All squashes are tender, and really should not be started until the soil warms up (650F) thoroughly. Sometimes we rise a hill, or two in early May, which may often be cold and wet here. We lay straw mulch lightly over the hills, or else use a gallon glass jug cloche-style with the bottom cut out. Still, growth is slow, and the first fruits are picked only a week or two, before that, from the main planting, which is made about May thirtieth.

We also recommend another way to get a head start.

Start your squash in a greenhouse, or indoors under grow-lights in peat pots, then when the warm weather comes, set the seedlings, peat pots and all, in the garden without disturbing the root systems. Note; Don't forget to dunk your seedlings in a mixture of water and KELP + PLUS (Fertrell 800/347-1566) Kelp + Plus is 20% - Liquid fish, and 80% Kelp and prevents Transplant Shock.

Perhaps it's simpler just to wait and at the right time, start the seeds in open soil. Under favorable conditions, the first squashes can be picked in forty days.

Even before our first group of hills has matured, we plant again. The second planting will come along faster in the heat of midsummer, and when they in turn mature, we pull up group one. Squash plants are capable of producing all season until frost, but older plants, weakened by heavy production, are more vulnerable to disease and attack by insect pests. It can't be said too often, that the first fruits are always the finest. Ideally, summer squash plants or vines should be pulled up after five weeks of bearing. (Note: Cucumbers, too)

To stimulate rapid, luxuriant, leafy growth and heavy bearing, summer squash needs lots of rich nourishment. Compost should be tilled into the soil before planting, with more compost spread later about the young plants as a top dressing. In cramped gardens where hills are three feet apart instead of the usual four feet, extra-rich feeding should be given; for example, we spray fish! seaweed foliar spray (KELP + PLUS) just before each

EAST END FARMING WITH JOE GERGELA

I hope all families had a nice weekend in honoring their respective mothers. Growing up on a farm, as is typical with farm families, Mom is the one who kept life in order for us. Mother, wife, housekeeper, farm worker, landscaper, caregiver, friend, and on and on, Moms do it all. Where would we be without them? I know how much my mother did for me growing up, and my wife does for my family now. I couldn't get along without her.

Two weeks ago, New York's legislative leaders reached agreement on the FY 2000-2001 State Budget. Although it was past statutory deadline of April, this is one of the earliest agreements in recent years and one of the best for agriculture. Due in large part to the leadership of Governor Pataki, Senate majority and Assembly leadership, the budget represents significant support of New York agriculture and the rural way of life. A big ticket item this year is an historic $12 million reform of the farmers' state and local sales tax exemption program, also substantial reductions in the gross receipts tax for energy and restoration of various agricultural programs around the state.

Governor Pataki demonstrated his strong support of agricultural economic development by the inclusion of who chairs the Senate Ag Committee and Assemblyman Bill Magee (D) worked hard to get the sales tax reform package through the legislature. For the first time, commercial horse boarding operations will be eligible to receive the same benefits on sales tax exemptions on items used in farming as the rest of the industry. Specific items included in the exemption that starts September 1, 2000 are farm equipment, farm building construction materials, fencing, electricity, diesel and other fuel used in production.

Some kudos to Long Island legislators are due as well. Senator Ken LaValle obtained $175 thousand for the East End Economic and Environmental Institute, which funds research, education and promotional programs in the five East End towns. Senator LaValle has been our champion on local needs, recognizing that sometimes state programs don't work well on Long Island. Thanks, Ken. Also, Senator Carl Marcellino (R), Oyster Bay, deserves credit for obtaining $900 million additional funding for Soil and Water Conservation Districts (SWCD) statewide. SWCDs implement environmental and conservation programs at the local level in every county in New York State. Thanks to Senator Marcellino's leadership in his role as Environmental Conservation Committee Chair, districts will be better able to deliver important programs on Long Island. Thank you to all Long Island Senators and Assembly members for their support of Long Island and New York agriculture!

Joseph Gergela III is executive director of Long Island Farm Bureau

Hanging The Perfect Picture

Pictures, whether great works of art or precious family photos, give a room warmth and personality.

By following a few simple steps, you can hang your masterpiece to maximize its impact and ensure that it will stay safely and securely where it's hung.

1. Assemble supplies. Start by assembling everything you'll need, such as picture hanging wire, screw eyes, a picture hook and nail; buy the appropriate size based on the weight of your picture. You'll also need a pencil, tape measure, hammer and a stud finder.

2. Select the room placement. Experiment by holding the picture up in different locations in the room. Experts suggest the piece should bring the room together without making it seem crowded and cluttered.

3. Prepare the picture. Install screw eyes on the sides of the frame about two-thirds of the way up from the bottom. Cut wire about 1-12 times the width of the frame and thread it evenly through the eyes, wrapping it twice around each eye. Fold it back along itself and twist the two pieces of wire together to secure. When stretched taut, the top of the wire should reach halfway between the screw eyes and the top of the frame.

4. Locate a stud.

To hang the picture securely, you'll want to anchor it to a stud. A stud finder, such as the Zircon iSensor™, is invaluable for this step. Priced at less than $10, it's as simple to use as it is inexpensive. Just place the iSensor flat against the wall, press and hold in the button for instant calibration. Slide it along the wall until the light signals that you've reached the edge of a stud. Mark the center of the stud, which will be approximately one inch beyond the edge.

5. Find and mark the spot. Now pinpoint the height on the stud where the picture will hang. Gallery exhibitors recommend placing the focal point at eye level for the average person, about 5'2" from the floor. Steadying the picture against the wall, hook your middle finger through the center of the wire and mark this spot.

6. Install the hook. Align the bottom of the picture hook to your mark and slip the nail in the slot at the top. Holding it steady, hammer the nail into the wall.

7. Hang the picture. Place the picture on the hook and adjust it until the picture is even. Step back and enjoy your handiwork.

For more information about Zircon's iSensor and other cutting-edge, electronic hand tools, check out the website at www.zircon.com or call 800-245-9265.

plant starts to flower. Summer squash needs plenty of moisture, but mulched summer squashes rarely need to be watered.

Even bush-type squash takes up a sizable space. This can be utilized for a second crop, radishes, for instance, which also helps to repel squash bugs. In midsummer, seedlings of other vegetables for fall use can be transplanted within the shadow of a mature squash plant that is soon to be pulled up. The seedlings are sheltered from the sun until they get established, then later take over the vacated space. Lettuce is especially appropriate for this intercropping.

A dozen seedlings can be accommodated in the space, compared to to four or five of broccoli or cabbage.

The main insect troublemakers are the same that attack related crops such as cucumbers and melons. The striped cucumber beetle which spreads bacterial wilt may appear as soon as the sprouted seedlings. They're a good reason for sowing each hill thickly, then when plants are four to five inches high, thinning to one sturdy specimen. Wood ashes or ground limestone are safe repellents. It would be surprising if these beetles didn't show up at some time or other; just as surprising if healthy plants in healthy soil succumbed to their attacks.

The squash bug lays reddish-brown eggs on the inside of the leaves. These clusters should be picked off and crushed before the gray nymphs hatch out. The brown adults can be picked by hand or trapped under a board. Plant the above-mentioned radishes nearby, or strong-smelling nasturtiums.

The squash borer, a white, fleshy grub, works inside the stem near the base. The stem can be slit and the borer taken out and killed, or injected with the beneficial nematodes, a biological control.

How many plants per person if you want summer squash in some form every day or so in midsummer? At least three plants per person should do fine.

Seeing Eye to Eye on LASIK

Surely, you have seen the advertisements for laser eye surgery (LASIK), the price cutting promotions and even the laser shop in the mall offering 20/20 vision in 10 minutes. Now termed "flap and zap" laser eye surgery is earning rave reviews all across the nation. You have heard the claims: it is quick and painless. But, what else should you know? "The benefits of LASIK are tremendous, says Mark Speaker, M.D., Ph.D., one of the nation's leading eye surgeons, but he warns, "It is serious surgery and is not risk-free. It is important for people to research the surgery and the surgeon thoroughly before having LASIK." Dr. Speaker is one of the most experienced surgeons in the area, having performed more than 10,000 LASIK procedures since 1994. "I am concerned about inexperienced surgeons offering discount surgeries. If you wouldn't shop around for a discount heart or brain surgeon, why would you take that risk with your eyes?" says Speaker. "I want patients to understand the procedure, the risks as well as the benefits.

"Recently, I am spending an increasing amount of time consulting with patients who have problems resulting from LASIK surgery. When I have to operate to fix improperly performed surgery, it is much more time consuming and expensive than if it is done right the first time. These patients invariably ask themselves, 'How could I have been so naive or cavalier about my eyes?'"

To help sort through the confusion about LASIK and ensure the best possible results Dr. Speaker tells potential candidates for laser eye surgery what they need to know before going "under the laser."

WHAT TO KNOW ABOUT LASIK

- Undergo a thorough evaluation with a LASIK vision specialist to determine if you are a candidate for LASIK.

- You should be advised to discontinue using contact lenses for an adequate period of time before the surgery to allow the cornea to return to its natural shape. Hard lens wearers should go without their lenses one-month for each decade of use, while soft lens wearers should forgo theirs for one week.

- Be cautious if a surgeon says he/she has never turned away a potential candidate. The surgery is not appropriate for everyone, especially those with corneas that are too thin, flat or steep. Surgery should not be performed the same day as the evaluation.

- There is a long learning curve for surgeons to become experts in the procedure. An experienced LASIK surgeon will have performed several thousand procedures over several years. Do some investigating to determine whether the doctor is truly experienced in LASIK or is only experienced in other eye procedures.

- Beware of surgeons who say that follow-up care is unnecessary. Make sure that care will be convenient and accessible to you for a one day, one week, one month and three month post operative visit to ensure you are healing properly.

- There should be at least two technicians in the operating room during surgery, each with extensive LASIK experience and training, so that under trained personnel are not serving as backup.

- To ensure the best results, the laser should be calibrated after every eye.

For more information about LASIK from Dr. Speaker visit www.lasiknyc.com or call 1-877-527-4569 to schedule your free consultation.

POLICE BLOTTER

Two teenaged girls were walking past a van on North Main St. in East Hampton just past noon, when they were subjected to an undeserved sight. Jorge A. Gutierrez, 33 was allegedly pleasuring himself in the back seat of the van with the door wide open. Gutierrez was arrested and charged with public lewdness, a misdemeanor punishable by a fine or a maximum of three months in jail.

A Sag Harbor resident complained that somebody stole two pink plastic flamingos from a Palmer Terrace front lawn. The lovely lawn ornaments are valued at $18 for the pair.

Two women in the Riverside area of Flanders got into fisticuffs last week. One of the women, the "victim," told police that they smoke crack together, and that she told her alleged attacker, who is four months pregnant, that she would no longer partake in the aforementioned smoking for fear of harming the unborn child. The expecting mom became angered and grabbed the other woman by the throat until a bystander pulled her away.

At the Canoe Place Inn in Hampton Bays, town police arrested eight people. Those charged with public urination were: Joel Neumann, 18, of Brookhaven; Melvin R. Carallo, 16, of East Patchogue; Robert J. Junnelli, 17, of East Patchogue and Jose L. Aponte, 18, of Bellport. Those charged with possession of an open container were: Joel Michael Schwartz, 20, of Brookhaven; James Gerard Distefano, 20, of Brookhaven, Carl H. Volmar, 18, of Commack and Wayne A. West, 21, of Shirley.

Tara Edwards, 26, of Rocky Point, led ten police cars on a chase across the North Fork. It started in Aquebogue, as Riverhead Police tried to pull her over for failing to stay in her lane. Edwards not only did not stop, but allegedly tried to ram her car into police car in front of her according to Southold Police. Eventually she gathered a trail of four cars from Riverhead Police, four cars from Southold Police, and two state troopers. The convoy continued along Route 25 all the way into Greenport, where police finally stopped her at Front Street. She was not arrested, but Riverhead Police took her into custody.

Christopher E. Marczewski, 21, of Peconic, was arrested by Southold Town Police on an arrest warrant by East Hampton Town Police. Southold cops caught up with Marczewski in a garbage dumpster after a foot chase. The defendant was transported to EHPD headquarters and placed in a different type of containment.

Dan's LETTERS

STILL LOVES THE PLACE

Dear Dan,

I remember when you started your fantastic publication. My family had lived in Sag Harbor since 1877. In fact, my great grandfather and my grandfather had worked in Fahys watchcase factory before it had been sold to Bulova. Even though I had been brought up in Brooklyn and Queens, I've been coming to Sag Harbor since 1942 during summers and had in fact, lived there full time from 1983 to 1987 when I sold my house. I have great memories of the past, watched in awe how the area and the pace of activities have changed over time and still love the place very much. Keep up the good work with your publication.

Alan Klein, Florida

NOT NAKED AT ALL

Dear Dan,

This is regarding the letter to you from Valerie Bartolacci last week, her complaint about two "naked" people in our Spa - Advertising last year. I am so sorry that we hurt your feelings, Miss Valerie, but I have to correct you. Our famous Gurney's "Argilite Mud" Models were covered from head to toe with a thick layer of green Argilite mud and appeared in their Mud-costumes in several national health magazines; on the cover of Healthwise Magazine and on the Volvo website, the New York Times, New York Magazine, Long Island Business News and are on our Multi - Media Interactive CD and Website www.gurneys-inn.com.

Let me invite you to visit the beautiful International Health and Beauty Spa and spoil you with our very own Argilite Mud treatment and discover under a layer of fresh, organic, green, Mud the Hallway to Spa - Heaven.
